Jenelle is a site administrator at The Daniels Corporation. She grew up in Kitchener to Jamaican parents and moved to Toronto at 18. As a people-oriented person, Jenelle likes working in the industry because it allows her to meet and work with so many people with different backgrounds. Construction is an industry with lots of opportunities for newcomers to start and build a career. Jenelle began by joining the pre-apprenticeship carpentry program offered by Dixon Hall through Local 27. Before the program, she joked she was "Canada's Worst Handywomen." Realizing that you can work your way up from anywhere motivates her to unleash all her potential. She aspires to become a finishing super.

"To all the women considering construction, the sky is the limit! Do not limit yourself because it's a male-dominated industry; there is a lot of potential to learn and grow. When your employer puts the right policies in place against discrimination and racism – and enforces them – it really works."
